Instructional Objectives

- 1) The importance of using patient-reported outcome measures (PROMs) for patient-centered value-based health care.
- 2) Using PROMIS measures to address practical measurement problems in health-related research and clinical practice.
- 3) Using PROMIS measures to improve diversity, equity, and inclusion in health-related research and clinical practice.
- 4) The use of PROMIS measures to inform individual and population-based patient care, quality, value in health systems, and to meet regulatory/payor requirements.
- 5) How to move from PROMIS research implementation to clinical practice or health-system wide implementation
- 6) The benefit of psychometrically developed measures, like PROMIS to inform individual and group level change scores.
- 7) How PROMIS can be used for screening, symptom management and monitoring, and longitudinal follow-up and outcome assessment in various clinical conditions.
